

Christmas, [Igbo]. So it means Christmas is time when people come back. So it's Christmas [Igbo] Christmas.[foreign language 00:00:14] means events.

We have a lot of events during the Christmas. So we'll say [Igbo] Christmas. We'll basically say [Igbo] Christmas. [Igbo] You can say [Igbo].

It means children come together to play, to have fun. Yes, I want to say something. So Igbo language, we have various varieties of it. It's a dialect. I grew up in, Oka, like I said, in Anambra state.

They have this version of native Igbo they speak. But when I go back home to my own village, my grandmother they also have a bit different. Like what's different?

For instance, we say spoon. We say spoon as, you know spoon, but we say it in the city, if you want to speak in Igbo, you call it [Igbo].

But if I go back, my grandmother will say, [Igbo]. There's like a little variation of it. Sometimes when I go back home and my grandmother speaks to me and I respond back to her in Igbo language, she's like, "What are you saying?" There is a little variation also even in the Igbo language. It's not...
