

So my next one would be about sort of a local a new tradition a new tradition that's just come about since 2015, so it's only been around for seven years. In the past seven years, there's been something called the Tour de Yorkshire. So everybody knows about the Tour de France. The Tour de France was so popular that in 2015 in Yorkshire, they decided," You know what, let's do our own Tour de France, call it the Tour de Yorkshire."

And that has become a yearly tradition, really, a yearly sporting event that loads and loads of people come out to watch it. It goes all over Yorkshire. They pick different parts though. They will pick a route, for example, from Halifax to Leeds, because Yorkshire is quite big, really big.

I went to it and I was made to cycle all the way from my home in Huddersfield, up a mountain. It felt like to watch it. It's very fun. They have the same sort of stuff at the Tour de France. They have advertisements, big floats that come through first.

Then there was even a CD made about it called Vive la révolution, which is like long live the the cycling revolution. They recorded that at York Minster. Well, that was pretty cool. That's on Spotify if you want to take a listen
